

Ruth Adewuya, M...: Hi. This is Dr. Ruth Adewuya. I am the Associate Director at the Stanford Center for Continuing Medical Education. As a physician and educator, I value medical education on demand, so I am pleased to present Stanford Medcast, a podcast where I discuss hot topics in medicine, healthcare, and medical education with world-leading physicians and scientists. Designed with you, the listener in mind, I'll be discussing a myriad of topics with Stanford medicine experts. Starting with a focus on the COVID-19 pandemic, these conversations run the gamut from insights on ventilator management, progress on antiviral treatments, to addressing clinician burnout and promoting humanism in patient care.

This podcast series is perfect for the clinician on the go as the rapidly changing nature of this crisis requires frontline healthcare workers to consume relevant and timely information about the coronavirus, and because this podcast is a resource for you, I welcome your thoughts. If you have an idea for an episode topic or need to get your COVID questions answered, send them in an email to me at stanfordmedcast@stanford.edu. I hope you'll tune in to Stanford Medcast. Episodes start September 8. Listen for free on Spotify and iTunes.
